I have empowered myself to be the CEO of my life.

HR expert. Storyteller. Change maker.

I'm not a pair of shoes, I don't need to fit in.

What is it exactly that she does? She excels in the HR world due to her great curiosity for people, she helps individuals find and develop their potential. To Khady, human resources = human relationships. And as a storyteller she most definitely won't be stopped from promoting inclusion and spreading positivity. A real influencer, but add a bit of spice to it because her main objective is to leave an imprint. She currently made it her goal to share her wise knowledge with the youth, as a mentor or inspirational storyteller.

The status quo? Khady does not believe in there being only one right way to be, work or go around. It's okay to do things your own way and at your own pace, be your own leader!

"My whole life has been paved with obstacles, racism, adversity, discrimination, exclusion,... I have learned to dance in the rain. And turn every situation into a learning experience to become a better authentic version of myself. I developed a maturity to not wear the sorry hat and be the solution."

She and many other people have their own unique approach. That's why she likes to call herself a positive disruptor, and we are here for it!

Khady recently decided to pursue her dreams and moved to Chicago while her family decided to stay in Belgium. This shows again how this woman won't be deterred by anything in order to follow her ambitions. While for some people their roots can hold them back from chasing their dreams, Khady says that her roots were what inspired her.

Moreover, she could rely on her father who taught her to work really hard. The values she got out of the way she was raised by her parents, were the foundation on which she could build her fierce personality and a great career. She firmly holds on to them as she does not take values such as compassion, giving back, integrity for granted.
